Investigating New Serum.

Scientists in the Johns Hopkins university are experimenting with a newly discovered serum which they believe will eventually be able to restore a person to life after asphyxiation or drowning. The experiments performed upon animals in a number of instances restored them to life after they had been to all appearances dead for several hours. A few days ago an animal was brought back to life four hours after its apparent death by the injection of this serum. In this case, however, the animal died shortly afterward from blood pressure. It is believed that this tendency can be overcome and the new serum utilized in the resuscitation of human beings who would otherwise "die" permanently.

Electric Lamps in Verden Fighting.

According to a special correspondent of the New York Times, electric pocket lamps have played an important role in at least one engagement around Verdun, namely, the taking of the Haumont quarries by the French, of which he says in part: "Underground in the quarries the darkness was absolute save when bursting grenades showed brief visions of carnage and terror. Friend often grappled friend, until the French adopted the plan of fastening an electric pocket lamp to the tonic button. The light gave the Germans a better mark, but enabled the French to rally together and sweep the foe back in the final rush on 'massa'."

REASONS FOR GROWING OLD.

Men of Research Have Been Unable to Agree as to Why the Human Frame Debilitates.

To the question, "Why do we grow old?" many answers have been given. Meischnikoff suggested that we are poisoned by the absorption of the products of bacterial activity in the large intestine, for this brings about hardening of the walls of the arteries and also corrupts our bodyguard of wandering amoeboid cells so that they become traitors, turning upon the cells of the central nervous system. Others have suggested other modes of autointoxication. To some it has seemed enough to refer to wear and tear of hard-worked organs like brain and heart, liver and kidneys, for a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. Others have referred to the waning activity of the all-important organs of internal secretion, and others to the important fact that there is no multiplication or replacement of the cells of our central nervous system after a very early date in our life. It may be pointed out, however, that most, if not all, of the theories break down because they do not admit of all-round application. Thus it is plain that many animals that are not troubled with a large intestine nevertheless grow old. Furthermore, the theories seize on symptoms rather than on causes, for while it is good sense to refer to wear and tear, the question arises why all animals do not exhibit the perfect recuperation to which some at least have attained.

Prof. Child, of Chicago, has been working for 15 years or more with simple creatures called Planarian worms. One of the features of their life which he brought to light is their capacity for periodically becoming young again. Thus it often happens that a Planarian separates off the posterior third or quarter of its body, which speedily grows into a whole, while the diminished original heals itself and grows a new tail. When a Planarian is starved it can continue living on its own resources for several months. Its cells become smaller and they also become fewer, but life is not surrendered. Such facts have led Prof. Child to a survey of the animal kingdom, the result of which is to show that there is a much wider occurrence of rejuvenescence than has been hitherto realized. It occurs especially in connection with vegetative multiplication, but there are other occasions in which the creature becomes younger in whole or in part by lying low for a season. Perhaps this may be part of the value of processes of dying back and re-arrangement which occur in winter in some animals and in many plants.

Blood Transfusion.

This month's number of La Revue describes a new method of transfusion of blood, an operation often necessary under conditions which do not always allow certain precautions to be taken.

The method is due to Prof. Luis Agote, an Argentine surgeon, and successful experiments have been made before the rector of the Sorbonne, the dean of the faculty of medicine, and several professors and doctors.

Blood is taken from the bend of the elbow of the subject willing to lend his aid and collected in a receptacle which contains a solution of neutral citrate of soda, prepared in the proportion of one gram of salt for 100 grams of blood. This mixture prevents the blood from coagulating, without destroying its vital properties, and as the citrate employed is inoffensive to the organism it can be injected into the forearm without danger, thus obviating the chief drawbacks to the transfusion as generally practiced.

The receptacle for the blood drawn is a graduated glass with double tubing and has a large enough opening to allow the blood to fall directly into it. The end is pointed to allow the tube for injection to collect the maximum of blood without allowing air to enter. From three to five grams of solution are placed in it, a sufficient quantity for 300 grams of blood.—Paris Correspondence to New York Sun.
